the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased from 10.5 million to 13.5 million, and the number of people aged 75 and over has increased from 4.5 million to 6.5 million (Office for National Statistics 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of older people, and the UK Government has set out a strategy for the 21st century in the White Paper on Ageing Better: Our Future, Our Choice (Department of Health 2000). This White Paper sets out a vision of a society in which older people are able to live well, and to contribute to society. It also sets out a number of key objectives for the government, including:

- to ensure that older people are able to live well, and to contribute to society;
- to ensure that older people are able to live independently, and to participate in the community;
- to ensure that older people are able to live in their own homes, and to receive the care and support they need;
- to ensure that older people are able to live in a safe and secure environment;
- to ensure that older people are able to live in a society that is free from discrimination and prejudice.

The White Paper also sets out a number of key actions for the government, including:

- to improve the lives of older people by ensuring that they have access to the services and support they need;
- to ensure that older people are able to live in their own homes, and to receive the care and support they need;
- to ensure that older people are able to live in a safe and secure environment;
- to ensure that older people are able to live in a society that is free from discrimination and prejudice.

The White Paper also sets out a number of key actions for the private sector, including:

- to ensure that older people are able to live in their own homes, and to receive the care and support they need;
- to ensure that older people are able to live in a safe and secure environment;
- to ensure that older people are able to live in a society that is free from discrimination and prejudice.

The White Paper also sets out a number of key actions for the voluntary sector, including:

- to ensure that older people are able to live in their own homes, and to receive the care and support they need;
- to ensure that older people are able to live in a safe and secure environment;
- to ensure that older people are able to live in a society that is free from discrimination and prejudice.
